Announce New Public Crime Mapping Tool

The Raleigh Police Department has launched a new online crime-mapping tool that will make it convenient for people to learn of crimes reported in areas that are of interest to them.

“We’re very pleased to be able to provide accurate and timely crime data through this service, which will also allow community members to be notified of reported incidents,” said Chief Cassandra Deck-Brown. “It will also make it easier for people to communicate effectively with their police districts about crime, because the system provides case numbers that identify individual reports.”

Raleigh's online crime data, which can be accessed through CrimeMapping.com, is automatically updated in the early morning hours every day, and it provides information on the vast majority of crime categories. In keeping with the department’s policy, information concerning rapes and most other sex offenses is not included on the maps. However, two types of sex crimes will appear – indecent exposures and peeping toms.

Information provided by the site is exported directly from the RPD’s incident data. The new site is capable of presenting information that is compiled under the National Incident Based Reporting System, which the RPD now uses.
